The state of Utah has more than 300 licensed long-term care facilities, serving an estimated 18,000 vulnerable people. Long-term care facilities include nursing homes, assisted living, and intermediate care facilities for individuals with intellectual disabilities. In coordination with long-term care facilities and their industry associations, state agencies and local health departments are working together to strengthen infection control measures with the goal of preventing the spread of COVID-19 to this vulnerable population. The Utah Department of Health Healthcare-Associated Infections Program and local health departments provide direct COVID-19 assistance to and collect the data from long-term care facilities. The dashboard is updated daily at 1:00 pm and lists licensed facilities that currently have COVID-19 cases. Facilities listed in this data dashboard are those which currently have residents or healthcare workers who have
